WASLI Secretary, Zane Hema, was in his home country of New Zealand in March 2008 and ran a series of workshops on Mentoring for SLIANZ (the Sign Language Interpreter Association of New Zealand). This was a wonderful opportunity to meet many interpreters and to learn about how the profession is developing in New Zealand.

George Major is the WASLI Regional Representative for Australasia & Oceania and was in the last weeks of her time in New Zealand before moving to Australia to do further study, but still continue her role as representative with the support of the 2 National Members of the region.

The Secretary also had the opportunity to visit the School of Linguistics and Applied Language Studies at Victoria University of Wellington, where he met up with David McKee (Research Director of the Deaf Studies Research Unit and Senior Lecturer in Applied Linguistics) and Rachel McKee who is the Programme Director of Deaf Studies.

Rachel was the Guest Editor of the WASLI 2005 Conference Proceedings.

He also gave a lecture to the 2nd Year Students of the Sign Language Interpreting Programme at the Auckland University of Technology (AUT).

"There were many highlights during this visit. It is always good to meet interpreters and to talk about interpreting. It was great to meet interpreter students and it was also great to meet others who together play a significant role in shaping developments in the fields of Deafness, Education, Research and Interpreting.

On a personal note, I finally met a Deaf cousin who I had only heard of by name. He told me that I have 8 other Deaf cousins and I had the pleasure of meeting 2 of them during my visit.)

NEW ZEALAND – TRAINING OF SIGN LANGUAGE INTERPRETERS (March 2008)

Communications and Information Technology Minister David Cunliffe has announced the government will fund twenty scholarships for training in sign language.

"The government has set aside $100,000 in scholarships for the Diploma in Sign Language Interpreting through Auckland University of Technology," said Mr Cunliffe.

"We currently have a shortage of qualified interpreters in New Zealand. The scholarships, which are available from this year, should encourage more people into training. This is important for the development of new services for the Deaf community."

Later this year the government will consult on a video relay service to enable the Deaf to communicate via sign language interpreters. This would build on the telecommunications services already provided through the New Zealand Relay service.

"It is critical that we have enough qualified interpreters to make future resources for the Deaf viable."

To assist raising awareness of this important occupation, the funding agreement requires Auckland University of Technology to actively promote the Diploma in Sign Language Interpreting course and the availability of the new scholarships.

Background:

The New Zealand Relay service is administered under the Telecommunications Service Obligations (TSO) framework by the Ministry of Economic Development. The service provides telecommunications for people who are deaf, hearing-impaired, deaf-blind or speech-impaired. The service involves a relay assistant who voices everything that is typed and types everything that is said.

The TSO framework ensures the availability of certain telecommunications services, such as New Zealand Relay and local telephone service for residential customers, which would otherwise not be made available commercially.

Further information about the New Zealand Relay Service is available at www.nzrelay.co.nz

NATIONAL ALLIANCE OF BLACK INTERPRETERS

"NAOBI is the only national organisation that supports sign language interpreters from the African diaspora. As such, we recognise that we stand at an important crossroad. We do not stand alone. The fact that many cultures meet and converge here is what makes our existence so important."

NAOBI is based in the US and was established in 1987. The current President is Leandra Williams. The 11th Annual Professional Development Conference (NAOBI 2008) "Embracing the History ... Empowering the Future" takes place in Boston, Massachusetts USA.

WASLI wishes the conference well. For more information about NAOBI visit their website www.naobi.org
